Of the many different ways in which corn is prepared nowadays. two of the best and cheapest, but least used, are hominy and cornmeal. Hominy, when slowly cooked when fresh pork is part of the meal. There are several kinds of hominy-the white or pearl, which is the kind usually eaten as a breakfast or luncheon dish. and lye, or home-made, hominy, which is in much larger grains than the other two kinds and is used chiefly for dinner or lunch-

Cornweal mush is an old-time cereal and when properly cooked is delicious served with butter, cream, or rich milk. The secret of cooking it so that it shall be just right is to sift the meal very slowly into violently beiling water, using about six times as much water as meal. Boil it for fifteen or twenty minutes, stirring constantly. Another way to prepare it is to mix a cupful of meal with a pint of milk and a teaspoonful of salt and turn it slowly into a quart of boiling water; cook slowly for an hour, stirring frequently The mush that is left over is nice sliced and fried and served with maple sirup, for either breakfast or luncheon, the next day. Cornmeal mush and hominy are both excellent cereals to have when bacon is on the breakfast menu.

A nice home-made breakfast food is easily prepared by saving the crusts and pieces of stale bread and toasting them in the oven until nicely and evenly browned. Then run them through the food chopper and put away in a jar for use. When needed place the quantity desired in a pan, set in the oven to get crisp, and serve with sugar and cream or with stewed fruits .- The Cir-
